In 1985 he began working for a member of the Commission of the European Communities, Mr. Mosar, and in 1989 he joined the cabinet of Mr. Cordoso E Cunha, Member of the Commission responsible for Energy, Small Business, Distributive Trades and Tourism. His publications include two books entitled, "Health Policy and Administration," and "The North Atlantic Assembly."

While at the Brookings Institution, Mr. Brumter will be researching the electrical production and distribution industry. In order to rectify the fragmented nature of electrical sectors in Europe, a unique legal framework has been set up. Mr. Brumter is interested in researching the American legal framework and economic consequences related to the electronic industry as a source of inspiration for the EC Commission's new policy. He will be specifically highlighting transportation of electricity which has been emphasized for many years as a draw for encouraging investment in production and authorizing international trade in electricity relaunched by the agreements reached with Canada and the ongoing negotiations with Mexico.
