COMMENT

A Letter from Rome

OFF TO A GOOD START IN ROME

Both Mr. Wilson and Mr. Brown and their Italian hosts were well satisfied with the talks in Rome last week, the first of the British ministers' tour of the EEC capitals. The Italians demonstrated that they are amongst those most in favour of Britain's entering the Community, and Mr. Wilson succeeded in reassuring them as to the earnestness of his intentions.

The first result came as no surprise, but Mr. Wilson's clarification of his position was a little more striking, as the memory of the Labour attitude to European integration four years ago was still strong enough to breed scepticism - indeed, the French veto was not the only factor behind the breakdown of the 1963 talks. Mr. Wilson even admitted this in passing, and this redounded to his credit: as if to allay the doubts these memories might give rise to, he more than once has announced publicly that Britain accepts the Treaty of Rome as it stands, and asks only that certain "adjustments" in the form of additional protocols should be allowed. In practice, this means safeguard clauses modelled on those that the Six themselves have allowed one another from time to time.

Taken overall, there are three main points arising out of the Rome talks: Britain's definite political willingness to join the Community, Mr. Wilson's intent to make his soundings really exhaustive, and the existence of a number of difficulties, "not insurmountable" in the words of the President of the Italian Council of Ministers, but nonetheless "daunting", according to Mr. Wilson. The general impression was that the British Government had become far more flexible than it had been in 1963, and that it was prepared to enter into a full commitment to Europe. As far as his Government is concerned - and Mr. Wilson will repeat this assertion in all the other EEC capitals - it is no longer a matter of haggling over the Rome Treaty, but of sorting out the problems of life in the Community. Nevertheless, he thought it would be somewhat premature to start going into technical details there and then, in spite of which Sig Fanfani, reading between the lines, insisted on their dwelling on specific questions for a while. Quite a long discussion ensued, and both the Italians and the British representatives were able to moot several important points. These will form the basis of the studies the British Government must make before it can demonstrate the real consequences of Britain's entry to the House of Commons, and embark upon the final negotiations.

The first of these points - and perhaps the most interesting one - is the Labour Government's assertion that Britain can right her balance of payments and put the economy on a sound footing before the end of this year. This means, since Mr. Wilson has maintained that his country will never seek EEC membership while its position is still weak, that the real negotiations between the Six and Britain could not get under way - if London, after the present soundings, decides to request them - before 1968. The second point, and one to which the Italians attach particular importance, is that in reply to one of Sig Fanfani's questions, Mr. Wilson gave his assurance that Britain would never hamper the freedom of movement of labour and would cooperate fully, and in a community spirit, in the solving of sociological problems, as well as in matters of social security. The third point, a vital one, but on which the British were unwilling to show their colours too much, concerns agriculture. It is in this sector that the British Government, in the final negotiations, will be trying to secure the greatest possible number of "adjustments" to safeguard both the country's interests and those of the Commonwealth, especially New Zealand. The cost to Britain of entering the Community will be considerable, and £200 million is the figure most often quoted. This is why Mr. Brown stressed the danger of an increased cost of living and the need to maintain a favourable balance of payments. The Italians reply to this, obviously enough, was that when the time comes, Britain should not only count the cost to herself, but also bear in mind the sacrifices the present members of the Community had to make in the cause furthering community integration.

The final negotiations of course, must needs deal with other questions, and Mr. Wilson mentioned those raised by the safeguarding of Britain's trade links with the Commonwealth, the movement of capital, and regional development. In any case, the British Prime Minister cannot now be in any doubt that the Italians, although ready to support and assist the entry of Britain into the EEC, are not willing to do this if excessive concessions are required. Both Socialists and Republicans were already working for this cause at a time when the majority of the British wanted nothing to do with the Community, fearing its domination by the French. In fact, Mr. Wilson has yet to ask for any such concessions. He has confined himself to stating that Britain's technological and scientific assets would enable Western Europe to become a major industrial power. A unified market of 300 million people according to him, would allow Europe to face up to both the United States and the Soviet Union. At such a moment, Mr. Wilson indicated, Europe would be second to no one. He let it be understood that at such time, Europe would also be able to act independently of the United States. The loyalty of Britain to the Atlantic Alliance was not in doubt but "we do not believe" that anything in it (NATO) requires us to accept the domination of European industrial and economic life by American industrial interests... We Europeans are able to stand on our own feet, even though, unfortunately, we are today still subject to this supremacy".

These skilfully-presented proposals enable us to see the political context in which Mr. Wilson wanted his Rome visit to be placed. The impression was gained here that he was using these talks to prepare his meeting with General de Gaulle. Admittedly no hint was made during eight hours of discussions in Italy as to the obstacles the Prime Minister might meet in Paris, except perhaps in what he said at the Quirinal: "The road is difficult, but the obstacles must be overcome. If we fail, it will be a said day for both us and Europe, but the fault will neither ours nor yours".

It would therefore appear that in order, to enter the EEC, Britain is willing to pay an economic and political price. Mr. Wilson did not hesitate to complete his first and fairly gaullist remark already quoted by another - "If we enter the EEC, we will do all that is possible to further the political union of Europe". "Further" and not "create" suggests that the political union so dear to General de Gaulle already exists. Was this just a tactical ploy, aimed at removing the threat of another French veto? A simple reply is difficult, but the Italian leaders are not pessimistic from the outset; rather do they believe that steps are possible:

if the British decide to reopen the negotiations, these will be long and tough and the outcome will depend above all on the general political goodwill. Current events show that Britain is a sincere suitor, but the seriousness of the soundings undertaken also shows that once the British government has drawn up a complete list of the problems and difficulties involved, it will strive to obtain the maximum number of safeguard clauses. Then will come the time for the game of give and take, in which for Paris, probably more than elsewhere, the final outcome will really be decided.

Mr. Wilson's remarks on supra-nationality were guarded: in the present state of affairs political intergration did not of itself involve supra-nationality; but having said this, the British stated that they favour a political organisation of Europe, with integration that does not destroy the concept of national sovereignity. Maybe this is how they hope to overcome any French opposition, but it is not an attitude calculated to please the Italians, whose position is quite clear. The militant anti-gaullist socialists, wanting to be more socialist than the Labour Party or the German Social Democrats, have said that they are ready to break with France, should Paris use the veto again. But in general, the Italians, as Prime Minister Moro pointed out, would like to keep on good relations with all their allies. Signor Moro said, and his view is shared by President Saragat and Signor Fanfani, that Europe is unbalanced without Britain. Unquestionably, the Italians feel this very strongly, and the truth is that for Rome, the possible entry of Britain into the Common Market is treated as an issue in itself, and is not the result of anti-French or anti-American reactions.

THE WEEK IN THE COMMUNITY

January 16 - 22, 1967

From our Correspondents in Brussels and Luxembourg

THE COMMON MARKET:

Benelux and European Problems

In the bitter controversy, raised by the question of British entry, on the nature of the relationship between the United States and Europe, too little attention seems to have been paid to the efforts made by Benelux, under the leadership of M. Pierre Harmel, who has succeeded M. Paul-Henri Spaak at the head of the Belgian Foreign Ministry. Of course the value of these efforts will depend on solidarity within Benelux, which, for all the regularity with which it has been asserted, has often been only superficial. However, on this occasion, it does seem to go rather deeper, especially since the meeting in The Hague on January 20, between the three ministers concerned. One significant point is that M. Harmel will be the spokesman for Benelux when he receives his Rumanian opposite number, Mr Manescu, at the beginning of February.

What then, will the Benelux line be? From recent statements made by the Belgian Minister to the Senate in Brussels, the following points have emerged:

- 1) Political support for British entry to the Common Market is wholehearted, even radical. In the eyes of the smaller member-countries, British membership is essential to ensure harmony within the Community. In fact the whole situation can be summed up fairly simply: Benelux is delighted with the happy state of Franco-German relations, essential to the building of a united Europe, but anxious to prevent this relationship acting against their own interests, and only British membership of the Common Market can provide a safeguard against this. Neither could closer ties be achieved with Eastern Europe without British co-operation. It would not only be immoral to choose the Communist countries in preference to the United Kingdom, but an agreement with the Communists would become less feasible politically.
- 2) At the same time, there can be no question of choosing between London and Paris. M. Harmel is quite definite on this point: "There can be no Europe without France. It would do no-one any good to have France isolated in Europe".
- 3) The problem is therefore to reconcile these two objectives. It is interesting to note, in this respect, that Benelux has no desire to temporise in the hope that eventually, or under certain political circumstances, France might change her point of view. At one time there were fears that this might be the case: in The Hague, even more than in Brussels, it looked as if there was a movement to associate the sovereigns of the Benelux states with the coming "European summit meeting" in Rome, to give it a purely ceremonial character and to prevent General de Gaulle using it to launch an anti-British offensive. This obstructionist tactic has now been abandoned in favour of a more positive approach which would to some extent change the general context of British entry so as to satisfy France's main objections.

M. Harmel is, however, aware of the need for tact, and has made some precise suggestions on this point:

- 1) Revision of the Atlantic Alliance: The accent is no longer on military integration (which is generally deemed a technical must for a small country without its own nuclear weapons), but on the alliance itself and its role as an "alliance for peace". However, France is not opposed to the alliance and has taken the lead in urging a softer line towards the East. To demonstrate his approval of this attitude, M. Harmel has announced that he too intends to increase his contacts with the Communist countries of Europe. Also, the Belgian minister feels that the Atlantic Alliance is the proper background for a meeting between the United States and her European allies, who should try to establish a joint position beforehand.
- 2) Getting the Political Union under way: The objectives laid out in the first heading (and especially the discussions with Washington) could provide a basis for joint action at European level which could be launched during the Rome "summit". But this action should not be confined to the Six. Anxious to "build Europe wherever possible", M. Harmel said in effect: "As far as a political Europe is concerned, this need not necessarily be limited to member-countries of the Common Market.... We should not exclude the possibility of the signatories of the Rome Treaty taking the initiative (a propos of the meeting with the Americans) in making a definite proposal to other European countries with similar systems of government". Legally, the accession of countries other than the Six to a European political union does not raise any of the problems posed by an application for EEC membership. Also, politically, the stress is no longer on the institutional structure of the union, as at the time of the Fouchet Plan (the Belgian minister speaks of "minimum rules of interdependence on foreign policy"), but on the reasons for co-operation. However as far as they have been outlined, these objectives seem to meet the French government's requirements.
- 3) Scientific co-operation: Similar action is envisaged in the field of scientific and technological co-operation, and this is one of Mr Wilson's major trump-cards, a fact readily appreciated by the French. M. Harmel, using his position as president of the EBC Council, has asked that Sig Fanfani's suggestions in this field should be considered by the Six next February. "We must", he says, "begin by harmonising our positions and our methods within the EEC". But he adds, "And then straight away, Britain must be called in to find out what Mr Wilson means by his Technological Community. Only then will Europe be able to open worthwhile negotiations with the United States to try to solve this increasingly vital problem".

Finally, the greatest merit of the Benelux diplomatic move is that it tackles the problem of British entry to the EEC in its true aspect, which is much more than mere expansion of the Community. The second merit is that no attempt has been made to isolate France in trying to find the answer (this would be useless and probably disastrous as well), but that an attempt has been made to meet some of her objections, where these are not prompted by selfish "desire for power" but by an objective analysis of the relations developing between the West and the rest of the world.

Progress in Monetary Co-operation

The EEC Finance Ministers, meeting in the Hague on January 16 and 17, were able to make some progress on the principles of European monetary co-operation, even though no immediate concrete decisions were taken. The Six dealt with the first two points on the agenda, harmonisation of fiscal measures and the formation of a European capital market, by taking a broad look at the problem involved, on the basis of reports submitted by the Commission. In reality this means the Segre report, and for a number of reasons: it is a document drawn up by independent experts, committing neither the Commission nor the member states; not only does it examine major issues on which decisions might be rapidly taken, but it also carefully studies in detail all aspects of the problem; this - the development of a European Capital Market - has too many side-effects for it to be dealt with hurriedly. Signor Colombo, whose "European" outlook is well known, reminded his colleagues that the question cannot be solved satisfactorily until there are joint coherent policies in the financial and economic sphere.

In short, the Segre report is a useful study document rather than one to be used as a basis for decisions. But the action programme dealing with fiscal matters, which was presented by Herr von der Groeben, a member of the Commission, was more concrete in nature. With regard to its most immediately important section, the harmonisation of turnover taxes by the adoption of the French "added value" tax system, the Dutch did not withdraw their criticisms, but these no longer appear to attack basic principles, so much as criticise their application. The Common Market Finance Ministers also recognised the truth, as far as efficient functioning of the Common Market is concerned, of the various objectives presented in this report: the harmonisation of turnover taxes, the suppression of excise measures designed to remove fiscal exchange barriers; the standardisation of company taxes, and the abolition of discriminatory rules affecting the movement of capital. These aim at eliminating factors which distort competition; finally it is worth remembering how important the suppression of fiscal barriers is to industrial concentration, upon which depends the establishment of a dynamic and purposive industrial policy. All these proposals, which are to be welcomed, have been referred to the Community institutions.

But it is in the monetary sphere that the rapprochment between the Six has made the most striking progress. France's partners were worried lest M. Michel Debre might continue his offensive in the hope of converting them to his ideas on the need for gold revaluation. As it turned out, nobody raised this embarrassing question. Did M. Debre suddenly turn a volte face, aware that he would run into stiff opposition both monetary and political - and especially from Germany? Or, like a good tactician, did he raise the question in order to prevent some of his partners from adopting the American idea of creating a new international reserve unit? Whatever lies behind his new attitude he managed, by deferring the question of gold revaluation, for a time at least, to get his colleagues to agree to views other than those held by Washington.

This is more a triumph of common sense than "one up" for Paris, especially as their solid financial - and European - basis enabled M. Debre the more easily to get his ideas accepted. This solidarity (which the French minister had called for on his arrival at The Hague, and which the final communique formally repeated) was expressed in concrete terms by the decision of the ministers to instruct the experts on the EEC monetary committee "to study without delay the perfecting of methods of international credit". Here the Community countries are on solid ground. The solution put forward for solving the international liquidity question is no longer affected by its proor anti-American tendencies (and anti-British: the strong opposition of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to any revaluation of the gold price is proof enough here). It is above all a pro-European solution as it is based on an increase in the quotas paid by the Six to the International Monetary Fund and on a reform of the decision-making apparatus of this body. This new attitude may well have considerable political importance as a precedent: it proves that the increasing solidarity of the Six enables them to accept the responsibilities of interdependence on a world-wide basis.

Another EIB Loan

The European Investment Bank has signed an agreement with the Banca Commerciale Italiana, Milan dealing with the floating of a new debenture loan of $25 million. The consolidated debt of the EIB now stands at $377.2 million. But it has a capital of $1,000 underwritten by the Six.

The loan has been taken up and offered to the public by a syndicate including Banca Commerciale Italiana, Kuhn Loeb & Co and the Banque Internationale a Luxembourg SA. The bonds are for a maximum of fifteen years, carry 6.5% per annum interest and have been offered to the public in Luxembourg at 98%. The loan is repayable in ten equal annual portions starting on February 1, 1967.

The Social Fund in 1966

In 1966, the EEC Commission, which is responsible for the management of the Social Fund, adopted 11 decisions concerning intervention, involving total costs of around $8.7 million. These measures cover half of the cost of retraining re-education schemes in the various countries concerned, and have enabled 53,632 workers to find new jobs. Once again Italy is the main beneficiary of repayments from the Fund, with 35,014 workers. The other member countries come in the following order: France - 8,623; West Germany - 6,897; Netherlands; 2,081; Belgium - 1,017; Luxembourg - 0.

The Community basis of the Fund is even clearer when one looks at its financial side. If the national contributions to the Fund are included, it becomes clear that only Italy (with over $2 million) and the Netherlands (with $900,000) have made a net profit. The main contributing states are France ($1.418 million), West Germany ($1.355 million) and Belgium ($168,000). Even Luxembourg, small as it is, has paid its share of $17,000; not an unconsiderable sum for such a country.

Since the Fund started in September 1960, it has paid over $40 million in intervention aid and has thus helped over 500,000 workers to be retained and find new jobs.

Exploratory Talks with Israel

On January 23, the Commission began its exploratory talks with an Israeli delegation with the aim of investigating the possibility of making an agreement with the Israeli state. For the latter, it is a question of vital importance and Mr Abba Eban, the Foreign Affairs minister recalled this, the day before the opening of the Brussels talks: the Israeli economy is going through a difficult period and has a deficit of $100 million in its annual trade with the EEC.

The solution of the problem is a delicate one, even if we discount the political implications. This stems from the fact that Israel cannot be placed in the normal category of an EEC associated state. Economically, it is similar to, if not more advanced than Greece, but it is not a European state: therefore the formula of association followed by membership cannot be used. Nor is Israel a non-European, mainly agricultural, developing country, with which the Community can sign a "non-African" type of association agreement covering technical assistance and the granting of preferences for agricultural produce exclusively: Jerusalem is ready to discuss scientific and technical co-operation with the Six and would like tariff advantages for manufactured goods. As far as agricultural produce is concerned, i.e. citrus fruits, it seems that the existing trade agreement meets most of the Israeli requirements.

Thus, it will not be easy to design the legal framework of an agreement, nor create a free-trade area or customs union for manufactured goods between the two partners. All the same, the Six agree in general that a solution should be found to the present trade deficit, as Israel is an important market for such products, especially for semifinished products. Might this solution be to make tariff reductions on high added value products, such as electronic and petrochemical products, as these are of special interest to the Israelis? It is not impossible.

ECSC:

The High Authority makes Industrial Retraining Grants

Luxembourg: The High Authority has just decided, pending approval by the Council of Ministers, to grant credits totalling $2.3 million for five industrial retraining schemes in the mining areas of the Ruhr, the Pas-de-Calais, Lorraine, Liege and the Dutch Limburg.

The completion of these five schemes will create 1,000 new jobs in the areas in question. Half of these jobs will be reserved for former coal and iron miners. If the Council approves the schemes, retraining loans with an interest rate of 4.5% may be granted. The interest will be paid out of the $44 million the High Authority put aside last year to cover retraining schemes.

The Financial Deterioration of the Community's Iron and Steel Industry

The present-day problems of the Community's steel industry stem from excess production capacity throughout the world and the frantic competition and decline of prices caused thereby: their worst sympton is diminishing returns and the deterioration of the steel concerns' financial position. Betweeen 1960 and 1965, crude steel production in the Community rose by 17.7% and sales by 19.9% (in weight) a moderate expansion in production, but this purely quantitive feature is not what really counts. In fact the production costs per ton of crude steel only rose slightly and if prices had been maintained at a satisfactory level, the Community's steel industry would not be in the position it is now in.

As far as costs are concerned, between 1960 and 1965 in the raw materials sector there was a drop of $4.56 per ton of crude steel produced. This came down from $25.74 in 1960 to $21.19 in 1965, despite a slight rise in the price of ferrous alloys and other additives.

There was a certain increase in the cost of energy (which rose from $19.90 per ton of crude steel to $21.46 in 1965), but the biggest rise was due to wage increases and other labour costs, which rose by $5.23 per ton over the period in question.

Altogether, average production costs in the Community's steel industry rose only by $1.11 per ton to reach $88.33 per ton in 1965 as against $87.22 in 1960.

But whilst production rose by 17.7% and only slight increases took place in costs, the turnover of the Community's iron and steel industry rose by only 10%, as shown by the following table.

		TABLE I
Belgium	93.7	97.9	116.2	120.0
France	100.7	101.8	113.9	114.5
Italy	107.5	104.7	110.2	131.6
Luxembourg	92.8	90.6	103.7	102.8
Netherlands	94.9	101.9	112.9	118.7
West Germany	90.5	85.4	102.5	103.0
Community	95.1	93.1	107.6	110.7

Turnover has therefore risen at a much slower rate than production or sales. In other words, the turnover per ton of crude steel has dropped regularly in all the member countries and in 1965 it was about 8% below the 1960 level. This decline has been around 7% in Belgium and in West Germany, 3% in France, 11% and 2% respectively in Italy and the Netherlands.

For the Community as a whole, the turnover per ton of crude steel fell from $124.42 per ton in 1960 to $114.04 in 1965. It should however be added that these variations in turnover are influenced by a number of factors, in particular by changes in production structure, whereby a greater quantity of finished products are sold. Because of this, the fall in revenue has to some extent been cut back.

For the years 1960 to 1965, the High Authority's experts have worked out that there was a fall in revenue of $6.22 per ton of crude steel produced, the value of the quantity produced for sale falling from $91.48 per ton in 1960 to $85.26 in 1965.

It is also worth noting that on the basis of a statistical survey, carried out by the High Authority, of the annual reports of the Community's steel concerns (44 firms representing 44% of the ECSC's total steel production) that the relationship between trading results and turnover fell from 13% in 1960 to only 10% in 1965. It is no less interesting to compare the difference between the constitution of the trading results in 1960 and 1965 (as a percentage of the total).

	TABLE II
Amortization	64	60
Reserves and contingency fund	11	3
Financing expenses	11	25
Distributed	14	12
	100	100

Between 1960 and 1965, locked up capital rose from 47.8% to 55.3%. At the same time the indebtedness of the Community's steel industry continued to grow, with short-term debts going from 25.5% of the total in 1960 to 31.8% in 1965, and long-term debts rose from 25.8% to 28.7%. The role played by firms own funds fell during the period in question from 39.2% to 31.6%.

The Dutch group already has engineering and sales offices in Düsseldorf, Brussels, Paris, Stockholm and Kennington, Staffordshire through MULDER-VOGEM INTERNATIONAL NV (see No 369). It recently gained a holding in the mechanical and metallurgical construction firm for the chemical industry SCHOONEBEEKSE MACHINEFABRIEK & CHEMISCHE APPARA-TENBOUW NV, Schoonebeek. This company, which increased its authorised capital to F1 2.1 million in 1965, is linked with the German metallurgical firm WINKELMANN & PANNHOF GmbH, Ahlan, Westphalia; it was formed in 1961 (capital F1 500,000) by two Germans Herr E. Lothar von Mühlen of Bösensall and Herr M.F. von Landsberg-Volen of Helmern Kr. Warburg.

 M.A.N.-MASCHINENFABRIK AUGSBURG-NUERNBERG AG, Augsburg (64.84% controlled by the heavy engineering group GUTEHOFFNUNGSHUETTE AKTIENVEREIN, Nuremberg - see No 391) has negotiated the purchase of a 50% interest in the heavy vehicles building concern (lorries and coaches), BUESSING AUTOMOBILWERKE AG, Brunswick (see No 324). The other 50% of the capital of the latter continues to be held by SALZGITTER AG, Salzgitter and Berlin (see No 391). Bussing's turnover fell from DM 240 million in 1965 to 218 million in 1966, when it registered an overall loss of DM 60 million. Its main link in Germany is with OM SpA, Milan (of the Turin FIAT group) in BUESSING-ON-VERTRIEBS GmbH, Munich, and it has several foreign subsidiaries: BUESSING AUTOMOBILIEN NV, Aalst, Netherlands; NOR-DISK KAROSSERIEFABRIEK A/S, Suenburg, Denmark (67% in association with the local firm INTERDAN) and REPRESENTACION BUESSING EN EL PERU SA, Peru.

During the 1965-66 period, MAN's turnover topped the DM 1,000 million mark, and it assembles some 12,000 heavy vehicles each year in its Munich factories. It recently granted a diesel engine licence to VICKERS LTD of Millbank, London.

 SIEMAG-SIEGENER MASCHINENBAU GmbH, Dahlbruch Kr. Siegen (see No 377) and WEAN-DAMIRON SA, Paris (see No 335), have decided to co-operate closely in the supply of manufacturing machinery to the engineering industry (presses and continuous strip equipment). To start with this co-operation will be limited to drawing up a joint technical and sales programme, which will result at a later date in Siemag taking a 30% interest in Wean-Damiron. The balance of the Paris company's capital of Ff 7.56 million will remain equally shared between its present shareholders, DAMIRON & CIE SA, Paris (35%) and 35% by the group made up by WEAN ENGINEERING CO, Warren, Ohio, and THE McKAY MACHINE CO, Youngstown, Ohio. The German group will also take an interest in the French concern's German subsidiary WEAN-DAMIRON McKAY & CO GmbH, which will be changed to WEAN-DAMIRON-SIEMAG GmbH, and its offices will be moved from Düsseldorf to Dahlbruch.

McKEE & CO, Cleveland, Ohio (see No 343) and CTIP-CIA TECNICA INDUSTRIE PETROLI SpA, Rome (see No 370, when the American concern bought the major of the interest held by SOFINA SA, Brussels, in the Italian firm. The number of these will also be increased considerably, as the British Monopolies Commission has just approved GKN's takeover, planned a year ago (see No 330), of the London group BIRFIELD Ltd: this is in spite of the fact that the move will give the Smethwick group a virtual monopoly in Britain in transmission shafts and gaskets.

In the Common Market alone, Birfield controls the following: 1) In West Germany, UNI-CARDAN AG, Lohmar, Rhineland (see No 353), which itself has three affiliates in Essen, Lohmar and Offenbach (see No 288): 2) In France, GLAENZER-SPICER SA, Poissy (see No 323), in which the group has both direct and indirect interests through Uni-Cardan, which acquired its shares late in 1965 from FRANCAISE DES DISTILLERIES DE L'INDOCHINE (a member of the EMPAIN group), and FELCO-FRANCE SA, Paris (see No 262): 3) In Italy, BIRFIELD TRANSMISSIONI SpA, Brunico, Bolzano: 4) In the Netherlands, PORCE-MASTER SERVICE (AMSTERDAM) NV (see No 330), and BIRFIELD (NEDERLAND) TRANSMISSIE NV (see No 262), both in Amsterdam.
