Transport in central European countries 1993-1998

Hans Strelow

Poland, Romania and the Czech Republic together account for 62% of the total length of railway lines in the central European countries.

Road and rail are the dominant modes of freight transport, performing 178 billion and 158 billion tonne-km respectively.

International transport accounts for an important part of all transport modes, ranging from 42% for road to 94% for air and maritime transport.

The number of persons killed in road accidents remains more or less stable since 1993.

Transport infrastructure

The countries with the longest railway lines are: Poland, Romania, and the Czech Republic. This ranking changes when we compare the density of the railway network. Thus, the countries with the highest density of railway lines are the Czech Republic with 1 196 km/10 000 km², Hungary with 821 km/10 000 km² and the Slovakia with 748 km/10 000 km².

The Czech Republic, Hungary and Lithuania are the only countries with a length of motorway longer than 400 km. There are no comparable data available on the ordinary road length.

Almost 66% of the total length of oil pipelines is found in three countries: Poland (2 278 km; 73km/10 000 km²), Hungary (2 071 km; 223 km/10 000 km²), and Romania (1 441 km; 60 km/10 000 km²).

Central European countries have a total length of inland waterways of 9 339 km. A major part of these can be found in Poland (3 812 km), Romania (1 779 km) and Hungary (1 373 km).

Freight transport

Land transport covers the four modes: road, rail, oil pipelines, and inland waterways. Road transport is the dominant mode of freight transport, achieving 177 642 million tonne-km. Close to this, rail performs 157 896 million tonne-km while the other modes are less important, with 38 010 million tonne-km for oil pipelines and 9 820 million tonne-km for inland waterways.

The analysis by country shows that three countries share the dominant position: in the first place, we find Poland, with total land transport of approximately 150 000 million tonne-km split into 46% for road, 41% for rail, 12% for oil pipelines and 1% for inland waterways. The second and third positions are taken by the Czech Republic and by Romania with totals of land transport of more than 40 000 million tonne-km.

Table 2: Freight transport by mode - 1998

Maritime transport is dominated by two countries: Poland, with a total of 50 995 thousand tonnes and Romania with 28 233 thousand tonnes transported. In terms of volume, air freight transport can be considered insignificant compared to the other modes of transport. Nevertheless, the unit value of goods transported by air is high.

Internationalisation of transport modes

Rail and road both have a large proportion of national transport. Thus 58% of road traffic (expressed in million tonne-km) is national transport whereas 42% is international transport (transit and cabotage are taken into consideration).

For rail transport, 55% is national transport and 45% international transport.

As expected, a high degree of internationalisation could be observed in air and maritime transport. For both these modes, international transport

(in 1000 tonnes) accounts for 94% of total transport. Of course, it should be expected that figures in tonne-km (not available at the moment) should be greater than the previous shares since international distances are often greater than national ones.

Passenger transport

For land passenger transport the main mode of public transport used is bus transport, which accounted for 89 491 million passenger-km in 1998 followed by rail transport with 66 662 million passenger-km. Comprehensive statistics on private car transport are not yet available for central European countries.

Maritime and air passenger transport accounted for almost 40 million passengers transported in 1998. Although the maritime share of this is almost 50%, only a few countries have significant maritime transport.

Persons killed in road accidents

During the period 1993-1998 the number of persons killed in road accidents fluctuated from year to year, but with no significant overall trend. Nevertheless, there are countries in which a considerable decrease was registered, as in Bulgaria (-6.9%), Slovenia (-6.2%) and in Latvia (-4.8%). On the contrary, in some other countries the number of deaths increased during the years covered by these statistics, as for example in the Slovakia where the average increase was 6.2%.

> ESSENTIAL INFORMATION - METHODOLOGICAL NOTES

The data presented here were supplied to Eurostat by the national statistical offices of the central European countries.

A complete set of detailed tables will be published by Eurostat in the next edition of the Statistical Yearbook on central European countries.

These data are based on the definitions published in the Eurostat/UN-ECE/ECMT Glossary for Transport Statistics, available at: http://www.oecd.org/cem/online/glossaries/index.htm.
