- (a) For the purpose of this document, gross margin excluding VAT is taken to mean the difference between the total value of turnover (excluding VAT) during the year and the total value (excluding VAT) of the purchase of products for resale during the same period plus the value of stocks at the beginning of the year, minus the value of stocks at the end of the year.
The definition of margin differs from the definition of value added, which makes a deduction from the turnover of the value of purchases of products for resale and of products and services consumed by the enterprise during the year.
- (b) The data in this document relate exclusively to Great Britain, i.e. the United Kingdom excluding Northern Ireland and offshore islands such as the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands.

Introduction

This booklet is one of a series designed to present a number of data on the structure and activity of enterprises in wholesale and retail distribution in the Member States of the European Community (1).

These data represent the initial results of an attempt by the SOEC to encourage the gradual harmonization of national statistics on distributive enterprises, which began a few years ago with the establishment of a general framework of common references (i.e. definitions, nomenclature, classifications, etc.) which the national statistics should incorporate to ensure a sufficient degree of comparability between countries (2). This framework, to which the reader should refer for all details of methodology, provides for much more extensive information than that included in these first publications, which are limited to a number of basic data, all of which are not available for all the countries at the present stage of development of the national statistics.

The data for the United Kingdom were supplied to the SOEC by the BSO (Business Statistics Office), and relate to 1980 (wholesale trade) and 1978-1980 (retail trade).

The data in question are taken from the results of national surveys. The coverage of these surveys is not the same as the NACE definitions, although it is possible to put the results of them together to provide NACE aggregates for these sectors for some variables. The BSO has set out the results in a form approximating as far as possible to Community norms, although there are inevitably some differences. Perhaps the most important of these is that data for NACE 614.7, 651 and 652 are derived from a motor trades inquiry which collects a different range of information from that collected in the United Kingdom's wholesaling and retailing inquiries. There is only a limited extent to which it has been possible to incorporate these NACE headings in the results in this publication. Besides presenting the results for the United Kingdom alone we have also tried in this booklet to make a comparison of some of the United Kingdom's retail distribution structural data with those of other countries already covered by previous booklets in the same series.

On this point, we would draw readers' attention to the fact that, as a result of the differences in survey methodology from country to country, it is possible only to compare the general scale of observations. A high degree of accuracy is out of the question, especially bearing in mind the methodological notes set out below.

(1) Previous booklets in this series have dealt with the situation in France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg and Greece.

(2) cf. General reference programme of statistics on enterprises in wholesale and retail distribution in the countries of the EEC, Eurostat, March 1978.

Methodological notes

Geographical coverage: The survey covers only Great Britain, i.e. the United Kingdom excluding Northern Ireland and certain offshore islands such as the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands.

Nomenclature:

- certain NACE headings have had to be combined for both the wholesale and retail distribution sectors;
- the retail distribution survey does not include retail distribution of motor vehicles and cycles (NACE 651), of motor fuels and lubricating oils (NACE 652), of office furniture and office machines and equipment (NACE 653.3) or of fuels (NACE 654.9) (1). On the other hand, it does cover some of the hire and repair services which NACE excludes from the retail distribution sector;
- retail sales of bicycles and accessories are included in NACE 654/5 (other articles) rather than in NACE 651 (motor vehicles and cycles);
- retail sales of newspapers and periodicals are included in NACE 641/2 (food, drink and tobacco) rather than in NACE 653.

Statistical unit:

The 1980 retail survey covers retail businesses engaged in commercial activity and with an annual register turnover of at least £ 13,000. It is estimated that 40,000 small retail businesses may be excluded.

For wholesaling, only businesses not registered for value-added tax purposes are excluded. There are likely to be relatively few of these.

(1) Some data on trade in cars, motor cycles, fuels and lubricating oils are available, the 1980 figures being set out on the following pages.

1. WHOLESALE DISTRIBUTION

The results show that there were 79,611 enterprises in 1980 in the categories shown in Table I below.

The activity groups 615, 618 and 619 (furniture and household articles, pharmaceutical and medical products and miscellaneous products) taken together account for almost half of all enterprises covered. The next most important activity group (wholesale distribution of food, drink and tobacco) accounts for 16 % of all enterprises, with textiles and clothing accounting for almost 11 %.

(a) NACE 615 includes NACE 618 and 619

The average turnover per enterprise is much higher for the wholesale distribution of fuels, ores and industrial chemicals (almost £ 7 million in 1980) than in the other activity groups. The next groups in terms of turnover are agricultural raw materials, etc. (almost £ 2 million) and food, drink and tobacco (in excess of £ 1.6 million).

The stock valuation figures (average stock levels at the beginning and at the end of the year), expressed as a percentage of the turnover figure), varies from group to group, ranging from 4.5 % for wholesale distribution of agricultural raw materials, etc. (NACE 611) to 19 % for textiles and clothing (NACE 616).

Net investment (the difference between acquisitions and sales of fixed capital assets) in 1980 was equivalent to less than 1 % of turnover on average, the highest figure being 1.7 % for the activity group covering timber and building materials.

2. RETAIL DISTRIBUTION

2.1. General information

The annex (p. 25 et seq.) features tables setting out data on the structure and activities of retail distribution enterprises in 1980 (with additional figures for 1978 and 1979 in the case of certain variables).

In 1980, there were in Great Britain (i.e. excluding Northern Ireland) 225 574 retail distribution enterprises (excluding enterprises dealing in motor vehicles, fuels, etc.), employing a total of 2 322 000 people (average 10.3 employees per enterprise). There were 30 285 enterprises dealing in the retail distribution of motor vehicles, motorcycles, fuels and lubricating oils.

2.2. Breakdown by activity group

Table I below reveals that practically no change took place between 1978 and 1980 in the structure of retail distribution by activity group. More than 50 % of all enterprises were dealing mainly in food, drink and tobacco and newspapers. The next activity groups in size order were enterprises dealing in household equipment and clothing.

2.3. Average size of enterprises and local units

The average number of persons engaged per enterprise varies from one activity group to another, ranging from about 6 in group 654/5 (other goods) to more than 120 in group 656 (miscellaneous, mainly non-food, goods), with an overall average of more than 10 persons per enterprise in the retail distribution sector as a whole. However, it should be borne in mind that a large number of enterprises have more than one sales outlet, each averaging almost 7 persons engaged.

2.4. Average data per enterprise for turnover and investment

Looking at Table III below in conjunction with the similar table drawn up for the wholesale distribution trade (Table II, page 6), it transpires that, with the exception of group 656 (retail sales of miscellaneous, mainly non-food, goods), the average figure for turnover and net investment on the part of retail distribution enterprises is, generally speaking, much lower than the corresponding figures for wholesale distribution enterprises. The 'relative' value of investment (expressed as a percentage of the turnover figure) is, however, much higher in the retail sector (i.e. 2.6 % on average compared with 0.9 % in the wholesale sector).

2.5. Main average data per person engaged

As Table IV shows, the average figure for net investment per person engaged varies from one group to another more widely than the corresponding figures for turnover and gross margin (a).

On the other hand, variations between one group and another with regard to the average turnover figure are, taken on average, only slightly more than the corresponding variations for gross margin.

2.6. Enterprises' main operating data as a percentage of turnover

Enterprises' gross margin, expressed as a percentage of turnover, varies from 19 % for food, drink, tobacco and newspaper to more than 40 % for footwear and leather goods.

Table V shows that, generally speaking, there was less change in stocks in 1980 than in 1978, but that the constituent elements of the turnover figure remained very largely on the same scale in both years.

2.7. Mail-order sales

Almost 2 000 enterprises (0.9 % of all enterprises) sold goods by mail order in 1980, such sales being relatively more frequent in group 653 (books and stationery).

The figures show that enterprises in the mail-order sales business had a much higher turnover on average than all enterprises taken together (see Table III), the only exception to this rule being group 645 (footwear and leather goods).

2.8. Selected data relating to the size of enterprises

A breakdown of enterprises, persons engaged and turnover by size of enterprise is available only for certain fairly aggregated NACE group units (see Tables III to V in the annex).

Taken overall, the size category 'less than 10 persons engaged' accounted for roughly 90 % of all enterprises, 30 % of employment and 25 % of total retail turnover. At the other end of the scale, enterprises with 200 or more persons engaged accounted for 0.3 % of all enterprises, but at the same time accounted for half of all employment and 58 % of total turnover.

3. Comparison of retail distribution structure in the United Kingdom with other Member States of the European Community

In this chapter, we have tried to compare the data available for the United Kingdom with other Member States of the European Community whose data have already appeared in previous booklets in this series.

To this end, we have excluded the data missing from the UK's figures from the other countries' statistics too (i.e. motor vehicles and cycles, motor fuels and lubricating oils), and we have effected a systematic reclassification, combining dispensing chemists with medical goods, cosmetics and cleaning materials. Despite these changes, however, there are still certain differences in the methodological approach adopted by the national statistical institutes in drawing up these statistics. These differences (a) will have to be borne in mind in interpreting the results, with particular emphasis on the fact that any comparisons are of an indicative nature only. For all these comparisons, we have taken 1978 data (for all countries), and it should be noted that comparison is restricted to the retail distribution sector.

For the purpose of structural comparison, we have first of all broken down the number of enterprises and the number of persons engaged by population categories in each country (b).

Retail distribution, excluding motor vehicles and cycles,
motor fuels and lubricating oils

| Variables | U.K.(c) | FRG | F | L | GR |
|---|---------|-------|-------|-------|-------|

| - Average number of persons engaged per enterprise | 10.2 | 6.7 | 4.0 | 3.9 | 1.8 |
| - Number of inhabitants per km ² | 239 | 247 | 98 | 139 | 71 |

- (a) see also p.4 'Methodological notes' and Supplement No. 1 in the current series comparing France and the Federal Republic of Germany.
(b) The population of the United Kingdom (excluding Northern Ireland) in 1978 was 54.4 million, compared with 61.3 million in the FR of Germany, 53.3 million in France, 9.36 million in Greece and 360.000 in Luxembourg (cf. Regional Statistics Yearbook, Eurostat, 1981)
(c) The UK figures do not include Northern Ireland (see p. 4).

It transpires from this comparison that there are relatively fewer retail distribution enterprises in the United Kingdom than in the other countries (*), but that those there are much bigger, with the result that the percentage of persons engaged per inhabitant in the United Kingdom is much higher than in the other countries. While it is true that there are a large number of enterprises in the United Kingdom with subsidiary branches (the average being three sales outlets for every two enterprises), even comparing the number of persons engaged with the number of sales outlets, the average size of such outlets is greater than in the other countries (see Table E below).

Tables A to E below, setting out data by reference to activity group, show that there are certain exceptions to the general rules outlined above. For instance, in the groups covering furnishing fabrics and miscellaneous, mainly non-food, goods, the percentage of enterprises in relation to inhabitants in the United Kingdom is on the same scale as in the other countries, in the groups covering dispensing chemists, medical goods and other goods, the percentage of persons engaged in relation to inhabitants is lower than in most of the other countries, etc.

(*) This statement remains valid even if the numbers of very small businesses excluded from the inquiry (see page 4, final paragraph) are included, which has the effect of raising the number of enterprises per 100 000 inhabitants to approximately 500 for the United Kingdom, is below the other countries.
